Headline:
Dry and bright. Turning more unsettled later.

Today:
A largely dry and bright day with some patchy cloud and the odd isolated shower possible. Feeling pleasant in the sunshine, though winds will increase through the day. Maximum temperature 13 deg C (55 deg F).

Tonight:
Turning cloudier this evening with blustery scattered showers, continuing overnight. These could turn heavy at times. By dawn, a more organised band of rain moves in, bringing associated gales. Minimum temperature 5 deg C (41 deg F).

Friday:
Feeling colder on Friday with blustery showers throughout the day. These could turn heavy at times and wintry over the hills, with possible hail and thunder too. Maximum temperature 10 deg C (50 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
A largely dry day on Saturday with cloud thickening in the afternoon. Cloudy on Sunday with persistent rain and strong winds for most. Further outbreaks of rain on Monday.
